

Farm Parks in Rochester for the Day

by Amy Young
Published Sep 19, 2008

The city sprouted 16 temporary parks on National Park Day, or National "Parking" Day as it was in the city, including a farm.

The George Eastman House and Rochester Contemporary Art Center joined dozens of other cities around the country in showcasing the importance of green space by setting up miniature parks in parking spaces.

"It's a place for people to come, hang out, sit down by the chickens, grab a seat on a hay bale and just enjoy a little bit of farming life right in the middle of Rochester," said Kate Mendenhall, project organizer.

One park called "George Eastman's Working Farm" highlighted the history of George Eastman's estate as a working farm back in the day.

jme/ay

George Eastman's working farm.

© 2008 Time Warner Cable
Rochester, NY
All Rights Reserved